Talking about managing notes and clippings, which tool will be the first one to occupy your mind? Evernote! This is the brand that comes into my brain at first. I have to admit that Evernote did win great customers on the hyper-competitive market among so many competitors, like OneNote or Apple Notes. However, it is depressing that Evernote increases their subscription fee and decreases to only two devices for free users. This change has caused the seeking for converting evernote to pdf because they can back up their Evernote notes and clipping as well as read the pdf notes at any pdf supported devices or apps. Today, I have collected 2 different ways to convert evernote to pdf on both Windows and Mac.

Step 3. All done! The Evernote notes have been saved as PDF and stored on your computer.

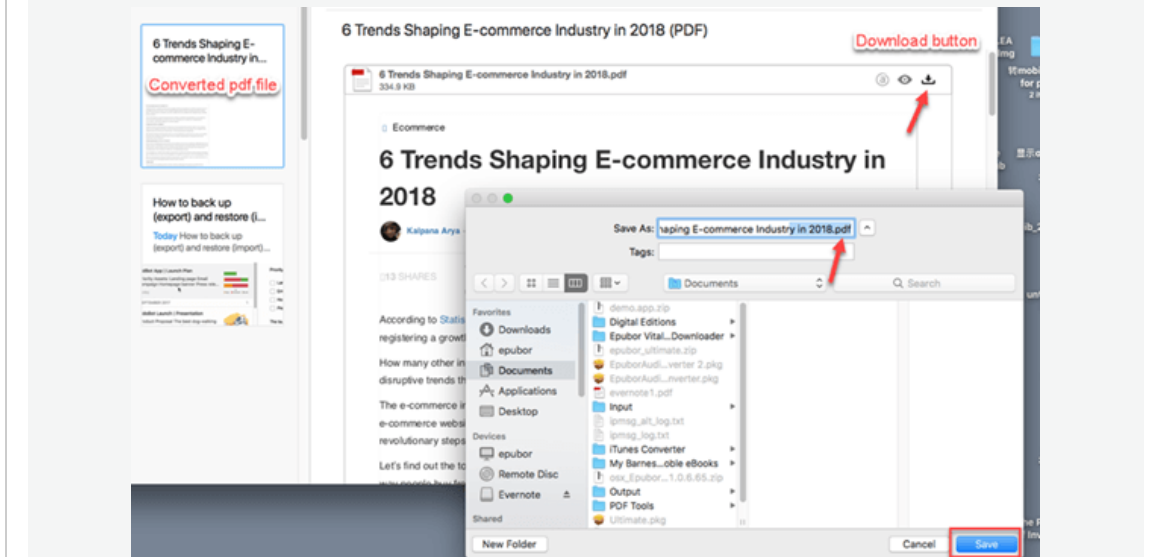

Bonus method for exporting evernote to pdf:

There is no direct "export to pdf" option on Mac, but you can find "Convert to pdf" option on Mac. With this method, you can only export one note at a time. Below is the detailed steps.

Step 1. Open the note you want to export. Right click to on the note, and select "Convert Note to PDF".

Export Evernote to pdf Windows

Windows PC purchased in recent two years all have the built-in Printers with themselves. So there is no need to install a virtual printer anymore. If you do ensure there is no virtual printer on your Windows PC, just install one. There are so many options among the market, such as DoPDF and CutePDF.

Step 1. Right click the note you want to export to pdf and select "Export Notes" at drop-down list. (Here I have selected two notes and export 2 notes at one time. If you like, you can select all notes by using "Ctrl+A" and then export all notes at one time.)

Step 2. The print setting page will pop up and you just select your virtual printer and click on "Print" button.

A new windows will pop up. Fill in file name and click on "Save" button. The conversion will start and the converted pdf file will stored on your computer.

This method is totally free and easy to use.
